The Stories.

Each of the speakers at the grand rally last night related a story which served to clinch the general argument made in the speech; and each story was good.

Hon. John T. Caine told the story of the old man who was noted for his profanity and the dire oaths it was his custom to emit whenever the least thing went wrong. Some boys hit upon a plan which they thought would give the old gentleman justifi-fiable grounds for a good solid swear, and as they wanted to hear him they executed the plan. One day, when he was driving his wagon, loaded with apples, up a hill, they stole up, turned the endgate down, and let the apples roll down the hill. The oldman did not discover what had occurred until he reached the top and was about to get into his wagon so rode the other side.
When he did see what had happened, he folded his arms, looked at the wagon, then at the apples scattered down the hill, and after a few moments profound contemplation turned to the boys, who were anxiously awaiting an outburst of oaths—and quietly said: "Boys, go home, I'm unequal to the occasion!" Mr. Caine said, whenever I read the Liberal platform, I cannot find words to express my indignation at it. I can only say: Boys, go home; I'm unequal to the occasion.

Mr. Thurman, while on the same subject, said: A little boy was engaged in making mud structures, one day, when the preacher passed along.
The reverend gentleman kindly enquired what he was doing, and the little fellow replied that he was making a church. "Why don't you make a preacher and put him in the church?" asked the pastor. "I ain't got 'nuff mud" was the rejoinder.
Mr. Thurman said whenever he read the abuse, the falsehoods, and the vile expressions contained in the platform, he thought they had exhausted themselves—they hadn't any more mud left.

Mr. Richards told the anecdote of the Indian who had a yellow dog, which had excited the hatred of the boys so much that they conspired to secure its death, but were afraid to perform the lynching themselves. The dog had its ears cut short and its tail cut long, so one day, after a great deal of argument, the boys succeeded in convincing the noble red man, that the symmetry of the dog would be better preserved if the tail were cut in proportion to the ears. He was convinced that the tail was too long, and the operation of amputat-ing a portion was to be performed by the Indian. One boy held the head of the dog, another the tail; and as the uplifted axe in the Indian's hand was descending on the block, the boy who had hold of the tail pulled his end, and the keen blade fell so that it cut the tail off the dog just below the neck. The Indian gazed on what he had done, for a few moments in silent sorrow, and then grunted out, "Umph! heap too short!" The application was that section 8 of the Edmunds bill was the yellow dog; and that without the words in the marriage relation; it was too long for the ears.
But when those words were inserted, "Umph! Heap too short."

Dr. Benedict was reminded by the efforts of the Liberal party at disposing of the People's party, of a story. One winter's night, when it was so cold that the rafters in the warm little house occupied by an old farmer and his wife fairly cracked, the old couple lay snugly in bed. A Newfoundland dog, with a coat of shaggy hair thick enough to keep a man warm in a Siberian winter, perished in barking and disturbing the slumbers of the old couple. The old man, unable to endure it longer, got up, and in his night shirt and bare limbs, walked out in the knee-deep snow and captured the dog. He got hold of the dog's hair, and he stuck there. The old lady, after waiting some time and wondering what had become of her partner, got up and called out of the window: "John, what on earth are ye doin'!" The cold night air carried back the words: "I'm freezing this d-d dog to death." The Liberals were the old man in his night shirt and bare limbs, out in the snow that bitter night. The thickly furred dog who was actually being warned by the old man, was the People's party.

Judge Dusenberry said: About thirty years ago, a Yankee pedler found himself down in the State of Kentucky; and while riding along on his old charger, came across a "handsome" Kentucky hunter who was riding a magnificent charger.
They got into a conversation, and the Yankee endeavored to keep his old plug alongside the fine bred southern equine. The old plug had a trick, whenever he was spurred, of sitting down on his haunches and letting his rider off, and as the Yankee urged him forward, and applied the spurs, the old brute dropped on his haunches.
The Kentuckian asked what was the matter with the animal, and the Yankee answered: "This is a peculiar kind o' horse; he's what they call a setter." The Kentuckian refused to be taken in, notwithstanding the Yankee protested it was true; that the horse was a species of hunting horse, and whenever he saw game would set down on his haunches and let his rider slide off. The further they went on the more the Yankee admired the southern charger.
Presently he saw a turkey, and spurred his horse until the animal sat down and he slid off. The Kentuckian sarcastically remarked: "I guess he sees game." There's game hereabouts," replied the cute Northerner, and the Southerner indifferently rode away and scarred off the turkey. The Yankee sometime after saw a deer, applied the spurs, and again the horse fell on his haunches and the rider slid off. "More game, I suppose," said the handsome Kentuckian. "I reckon you'll find it around" said his companion. The southerner looked around, saw the deer and bagged it. He then said:

"That's a valuable horse of yours; I must have it. I'm a hunter and I need it in my business." "Well," said the Yankee, "the horse is valuable, but I'm not a hunter, and you could use it better than I." So they traded horses, and rode on. They finally reached a slough of mud and water, and the Yankee's fine horse rode through all right. The old plug did not take so kindly to it, and his rider plunged the spurs in to urge him along. He sat down, of course, and the Kentuckian slid off into the mud and water waste deep. "What's the matter with the horse," he cried. "Oh," said the Yankee, "I forgot to tell, he sets for fish." Judge Dusenberry—Look out for setters my friends, and when the Liberals ask you to vote for their candidate remember the setter horse.

Frank Mayo.

On Monday evening Frank Mayo, the noted "Davy Crockett," appears at the Walker Opera House, to play four nights. He opens with "Davy Crockett," and while the piece has as good a reputation here as it can need, we still give an extract regarding a recent performance elsewhere:

"The admirers of Frank Mayo filled the Opera House last evening on the occasion of his reappearance in "Davy Crockett," which is too old an acquaintance to need an introduction. He received the heartiest of welcomes, and his performance was enjoyed with undiminished zest. His Davy Crockett is an elaborately wrought and highly entertaining piece of acting which seems to grow mellow with age, and which will never pall on the appetite of theatre-goers so long as it possesses Frank Mayo as the exponent of the hero of the backwoods. Miss Charlotte Behrens, a new aspirant to dramatic honors, played "Eleanor Vaughn," and she has reason to feel proud of her debut. Miss Behrens appears to be a natural-born actress.
She throws a vast deal of spirit into her acting, and shows remarkable aptitude. Her Eleanor Vaughn last night won golden opinions on every side and frequent applause. She has music in her voice, fine elocution and seems to understand fully the dangers of artificiality.
